SM4175; 1576; 23421	Prehistoric	Carn Dubh, crannog E of Inverinan. Scheduled Monument. Investigation in 1972 by a naval sub-aqua team under the direction of Dr T D McArdle of Edinburgh University confirmed that the stony island in Loch Awe, known as Carn Dubh, is a crannog. It is wholly artificial in that it does not incorporate natural glacial mounds, ridges of bedrock or a natural island surface as a foundation. The elevation of this crannog suggests that there may have been later re-building. Timbers in large quantities were visible and a sharpening stone was found.	NN 00130 17751
SM4186; 1605; 23450	Prehistoric	Cup marked stone 600m east-southeast of Keppochan. Scheduled Monument.	NN 08923 21396
SM4227; 1575; 23420	Medieval	Ballimeanoch chapel and burial ground. Scheduled Monument. About 300 metres NE of Ballimeanoch farmhouse are the remains of a small oblong building, presumably a chapel, standing within an irregularly-shaped enclosure. The building measures about 5.5 metres E-W by 2.5 metres transversely within walls 0.8 metres thick. There appears to be a doorway towards the west end of the N wall. To the east of the chapel there is a small open-ended building of sub-circular plan measuring about 1.8 by 1.2 metres within dry-stone walls 0.7 metres thick. The enclosure measures about 25 by 29 metres overall and contains no identifiable tombstones although a small standing stone may be a headstone. It is said that this site was a burial place in pre-Reformation days but there is no tradition regarding the former existence of a chapel.	NN 01427 16722
LB11890; 13847; 80975	Post-Medieval	Campbell of Sonachan Burial Enclosure, Portsonachan. Portsonachan. Burial-ground. Set in walled area erected in 1760. Damaged by falling trees in storms in 1967.	NN 04200 20577
